Urban Physic Garden

Work has begun on the Urban Physic Garden in Union Street with a call for volunteers.

The site is last year's Union Street Urban Orchard opposite the Union Street/Pepper Street junction where the same Wayward Plants team is masterminding the plan.

This year the message is 'urban well-being' says Rachel Milkulsky who is recruiting volunteers to make a garden "shaped by the hospital and the pharmacy" with a focus on medicinal plants and herbs that heal.

"It's a meditation on our relationship to plants," she adds. "We are using a poisoned soil which can't be used and turning it into something that can be by promoting health, well-being, relaxation and recreation."

She also stresses that the garden shows what can be done with reclaimed materials.

"Everything on this site is donated, reclaimed, recycled and resourced and it will go back into being used again in our next project. That is an important message as well."

The garden team's advisors include Professor Peter Houghton of King's College London's life sciences department, guerrilla gardener Richard Reynolds, Karen Howell from the Old Operating Theatre Museum & Herb Garret and Mary O'Connell of Bankside Open Spaces Trust.

"This project would not work without volunteers," says Rachel Milkulsky. "We plan to run a programme that volunteers will enjoy.

"The best thing about our volunteers is that they come from different groups. We have people from St Mungo's, people on corporate volunteer days, carpentry students, theatre design people, artists and architects.

"We'd really love to engage more with our neighbours," says Rachel who hopes to see residents dropping in to help with the construction and planting as well as enjoying the completed garden which opens on Saturday 11 June.

Donations of plants welcomed include sweet basil, chamomile, chervil, chilli pepper, coriander, dill, lavender, marjoram, marigold, sage and sorrel. Other plants can be given for a plant wall.

The Urban Physic Garden, which will include a cafe, is due to remain open until Sunday 15 August. The space will be available to residents' groups and playgroups as a venue for events. After the summer the trees will be relocated to other SE1 gardens.

A book about last year's garden called The Union Street Urban Orchard: A Case Study of Creative Interim Use (£15) has been published by the Architecture Foundation. There are chapters by those who made it happen, DIY tips, recipes using the fruits of the orchard and a foreword by Channel 4 News presenter Jon Snow.

LOCAL HISTORY

1711 Pop-Up Walk

Queen Anne gave Royal Assent to 'an Act for Building Fifty New Churches' on 12 June 1711.

Although only twelve were built lawyer Peter Dodge has devised a tercentenary walk for the actual anniversary on Sunday 12 June.

"London's first Pop-Up Baroque Church Crawl" links up the churches. The most famous example is Christ Church Spitalfields by architect Nicholas Hawksmoor. It was completed just as his other church was rising in Bermondsey.

St John's Horsleydown, built between 1727 and 1733, was partly demolished due to World War II bombing but its grade II listed base remains with the London City Mission offices built on top in St John's Churchyard between Tooley Street and Druid Street.

The walk, which can be enjoyed at any time, takes in the remnant of St John's between St Nicholas Deptford and St Mary Woolnoth in the City.

The limited edition walk guide has the appearance of an 18th-century pamphlet with street names as they were in 1711. Copies (£2.75 plus p&p) are available from www.1711walk.org
